BLIND SOLDIER CURED

Joseph N. Highsaw of Arkansas Restored to Sight After Four Years of Blindness.

As a sequel to the widely known cure of the famous blind soldier-post-lecturer, Tom Skeyhill, who is lecturing to vast audiences all over the country, his sight restored by osteopathy, another soldier has been cured of blindness in the same way in Hope, Arkansas.

Joseph N. Highsaw, who is thirty years old and a native of Beaumont, Texas, is the hero of this story. He enlisted in Missouri, nine years ago and served in China. He was honorably discharged, but re-enlisted just before we entered the world war and served in the Philippines.

Four years ago, while carrying a heavy weight up a flight of stairs at Manila, he began to stagger and finally fell, unconscious. He did not come to himself for three days. Then he was afflicted with unbearable pain in the head as if it were bursting, and with a sensation of rolling out of the bed. His whole left side was numb, and could be moved only with difficulty. He was blind in the left eye, and deaf in the left ear. His mentality was dulled.

After three months of this, he was sent back to the States to an army hospital and kept under observation for a year, when he was discharged as physically unfit for further duty, because of an injury in the brain. He was given a pension equal to full pay. Operation was advised, but he refused to submit to it.

The afflicted soldier was sent to an agricultural college, but was found utterly unable to study, so was sent home to Texas. He was brought before the county medical society at Houston, Texas, and was advised to discontinue vocational training. The brain injury then caused extreme vertigo and a sensation of falling. He sometimes did fall in a semi-conscious state.

Three months ago Highsaw was examined by Dr. Charles A. Champlin, an osteopathic specialist at Hope, Arkansas, who discovered the cause of his trouble, which had never been found before. The top bone in the vertebral column was twisted slightly out of position. Osteopathic adjustment restored this to its normal position in a few minutes. All suffering disappeared at once. The numbness wore away gradually during the next three days. His sight gradually returned and the tendency to fall subsided.

A month later, another osteopathic adjustment was made. Since that time, the blind soldier has been entirely well and is working six days a week on his college course in electrical engineering.
